Dartmouth Postdoctoral Fellowship in Primary Care Research

Applications are now being accepted for admission to a HRSA-funded T-32 two-year postdoctoral training program in primary care health services research at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center. This individually tailored mentoring fellowship is led by a team of senior primary care health services researchers: Cathleen Morrow, MD, Martha Bruce, PhD, MPH, and Mary Brunette, MD. This postdoctoral training program offers fellows the unique opportunity to choose mentorship from over 15 experts in the field of health care delivery science and primary care services research. Mentoring opportunities will focus on establishing fundamental research skills, obtaining preliminary pilot data, writing first-authored manuscripts, and submitting a research project grant or career development award in one or more of Dartmouth's many strengths in health care delivery science, including secondary analysis of population-based data sets, intervention research, and implementation science.

In addition to working with their primary research mentor to conduct a pilot study or analysis of existing data as the basis for an R03/R21 application, fellows will also have the opportunity to apply for a 3-year fellowship that includes a Masters in Public Health (MPH) degree from the Dartmouth Institute for Health Policy & Clinical Practice. As part of the training as an early-career investigator, fellows have the opportunity to attend seminars and workshops on health care delivery science methods and statistics, implementation research, mobile health technology, health care innovation, human and health systems engineering, and research career and grant skill development.

For additional information, or to apply, please contact Peter DiMilia: Peter.R.Dimilia@Hitchcock.org

The Medical College of Wisconsin's Department of Family & Community Medicine is committed to creating a just and equitable society, a fundamental obligation of the healing professions. We invite you to join us in this challenging and inspiring work, based in the "City of Festivals" on "America's Third Coast".

As an academic medical school department, we have expanded well beyond the ivory tower. Our department is immersed in the greater Milwaukee, Menomonee Falls, Appleton, Eau Claire, Green Bay, and Wausau communities, and is actively engaged throughout Wisconsin and among the national community of clinicians, educators, and researchers. We are outward facing, working to make the greater world better while the greater world makes us better. I invite you to learn more about the programs and people of the MCW DFCM and review our current open positions. Please explore our website:

CHAMPS

To learn more about the CHAMPS or submit your application, please scan the QR code or visit <https://www.msm.edu/Education/champs/>

CHAMPS is a year-long fellowship that educates and empowers early to mid-career physicians and PAs, practicing in medically underserved areas, rural communities, academic health centers, and federally qualified health centers (FQHC's).

Through facilitated instruction, Fellows will be provided tools to deliver quality patient-centered care. Fellows will seek to engage community stakeholders and elected representatives to implement systemic healthcare policy reform. After completing this program, participants will be prepared to lead change, engage in quality improvement and advocate for health equity within their institutions, surrounding communities, and at the local, state, and national levels.

Benefits include:

CME Credit

Access to Morehouse School of Medicine Resources

Support for abstracts, publications, and similar academic activities.
